A guide at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City was taking a group of sightseen through its beautiful rooms. As he pointed out the various pointings, he gave a brief lecture on eich work of art, along with a short history of the painter. "Now," he concluded at the end of the tour, "are there any questions."

"Why, yes," said one elderly woman, "how do you ever get such a high gloss on your floors?"

The young couple were lolling around in a secluded erea of the picnic grounds. Turning to his shapely companion, the handscene swein chirped, 'Dolly, this is the fifth picnic Pee taken you to and I've yet to see you wear the sweater I gave you for your birthday."

"What's the matter," responded the girl, "are you getting tired of looking at my suntan?"

"I'm a great fan of his! I spend more time cooling him off than taking dictation!"

"I don't like to boast," remarked the conceited senior to the freshman, "but you're going to hear that I'm the fastest mile runner this college work had."

"I hate to break your heart," said the freshman, "but some of the boys told me that your girl runs the mile in spectacular fashson every night."
